Communication is the vital role in our daily life, whether at the work-place or at home. The relationship between parents and children is strengthened by good communication.

The purpose of communication is more than just to tell someone a message. It is important to know that the essence of communication is to be able to connect and engage with people whom you are talking with. Communication is both ways – talk and listen. In this workshop, you will discover common pitfalls that parents make in their communication with their children as well as for parents to learn effective ways of communicating with their children. An effective communication goes beyond the purpose of disciplining a child. It builds strong relationship and encourages your child to acquire the ability to connect and engage with the people he is communicating with. Most importantly, effective communication at home can also impact the inner growth of a child.
